In recent years, the United States has been unable to maintain an international consensus for strict enforcement of all applicable U. N. Security Council resolutions on Iraq, but it has largely succeeded in preventing Iraq from reemerging as an immediate strategic threat to the region. There is U. S. concern about the long-term threat posed by Iraq and, in the wake of the September 11 attacks, the Bush Administration has emphasized regime change as the cornerstone of U. S. policy. The exact means to implement that objective has not been announced, whether it be through international sanctions and diplomacy, military action, or covert action. The regime change policy is not openly supported by many other governments, particularly if it involves major military action, but many governments support U. S. action through the United Nations to enforce Security Council resolutions requiring Iraqi disarmament of its mass destruction weapons (WMD) programs. During 1991-1998, a U. N. Special Commission on Iraq (UNSCOM) made considerable progress in dismantling and monitoring Iraqs but was unable to finish verifying Iraqs claim that it has destroyed all its WMD or related equipment. Iraqs refusal of full cooperation with UNSCOM eventually prompted U. S. -British military action in December 1998. All inspectors withdrew and Iraq . . . This item ships from La Vergne, TN.
