Not illustrated. 1900 Excerpt: .and home, it is forced to abandon its imperfect shelter, and construct a new one. This is better than the first, for the insect has become larger and stronger, and withal more skilful from experience. The sides of the larger leaf selected for its new habitation are drawn together by silken threads, so that the edges of the leaf meet closely and form a light and commodious cavity, which securely shelters and completely conceals the included caterpillar. This in time is eaten like the first, and another is formed in like manner. At length the caterpillar having eaten up and constructed several dwellings in succession, and changed its skin three or four times, comes to its full size, leaves off eating and seeks a suitable place in which to undergo its transformations. The young caterpillars are almost black; the full-grown ones measure about one inch and a half, are generally of a brown color more or less dotted with white, with a black head, rough with elevated white points, with white branching spines on the back, and on each side there is a row of yellow crescents. The chrysalis is gray, with a whitish bloom upon it like that on a plum, and the little pointed tubercles on its back are gold colored. The chrysalis state continues about ten days, or longer if the weather be cool and wet. The caterpillars of this butterfly are frequently so abundant as to almost strip the leaves from the...
