Excerpt: .with the rectilinear angle, (because the former is indefinitely less,) we may probably in many cases compare two curvilinear angles with each other. For, drawing the chord A R, we have: Rect. angle BAQ: Rect. angle BAR = PQ: PB, the radius being here quite immaterial, while it is the same for both arcs. Let the radius perpetually diminish; in which case the rect. angles tend to confound themselves with the curvilinear ones; so that we get: Angle BAC: angle BAD = limit of P Q: PR. Now a priori it is impossible to foresee what will be the limit of the last ratio, which must differ exceedingly in different curves. It is not difficult, however, to invent curves in which the limit may be (1: 1) or (2: 1) or any other finite limit: or again, in which it shall be zero, that is, in which the ratio shall diminish below all limit. 128. To exemplify this, it will somewhat simplify the matter to confine ourselves to curves drawn on a plane. Let A be the centre of a plane, upon which are drawn an infinite number of circles, whose common centre is A, as in Art. 81. Let AB be a generatrix of the plane, and AC any curve drawn upon the plane, so as to be touched by AB in A; and of course AC, like AB, will cross the circles. Let P P P.
