Excerpt: . . . holy and ancient Catholic religion will be destroyed. Trample those books under your feet, or we shall be saying mass to empty walls! A glorious testimony to the simple power of the Irish Bible; an English one does them no harm, for a Roman Catholic will not touch a book written by the devil, but the devil never knew Irish, or spoke the language of Paradise (Life, p. 128-9). Mr. Pennefather wrote thus in October, 1841. The description gives a fair picture of the same kind of meetings of Irish teachers held three times every year since that date in every Mission district-throughout twelve counties of Ireland; of meetings held by the present writer in many of those districts during July, August, and September, 1878. Ireland has undergone a great social revolution during the last thirty-seven years. In many parts English education has rapidly...
