It was gratifying to observe that this question was practically settled by the very first slag that ran out of the first Mount Lyell furnace, though not a little amusing mystification was engendered by the extreme emphasis of the endorsement given by the furnace. It went even further than the wildest expectation could have gone, for the slag analysis revealed no copper at all. Suspicion at once fell on the chemist, poor man! than whom there is not a more conscientious and careful analyst living; but a repeat analysis only showed the same result. Recent American...
